Cyber claims examples

Encryption, ransomware, exfiltration event

An Insured financial services company was impacted by a significant ransomware attack which involved the encryption and exfiltration of a large amount of data, including personal information and third party client data.

The third party downstream impacts created complexity for the Insured company and a number of workstreams under multiple cyber policy coverages were essential to ensuring the company could recover back to business as usual.

EVENT: Encryption, ransomware and exfiltration on an insured financial institution

RECOVERY: A number of workstreams under multiple cyber policy coverages were essential

-  IT forensic and ransom negotiation experts were engaged immediately to evaluate the extent of the ransomware attack and data exfiltration, and to consider the Insured's options given the sensitivity of the impacted data.
-  Cyber breach lawyers were appointed to manage the incident response under legal professional privilege; ensure the Insured company's interests were protected; complying with the Insured's regulatory notification obligations and responding to statutory notices issued by the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner.
-  Ransomware reimbursement
-  The exfiltration of data required a dedicated eDiscovery vendor to analyse a large volume of impacted data for personal information and determine which individuals needed to be notified.
-  In tandem, a specialist public relations firm was engaged to provide advice on all major communications with employees, clients, the media and the public to minimise any reputational harm and potential business interruption loss. The insured had the benefit of both PR and legal advice where third party claims were not able to be avoided.

Liberty and the Insured company collaborated on the resolution of third party claims with a view to preserving the business' commercial relationships. One aspect of this was engaging proactive credit monitoring services to assist impacted individuals with advice to minimise identity theft.

Cyber claims examples

Pre-ransomware and exfiltration event

An Insured construction company was notified of a potential data breach by a third party who discovered the Insured company's details on a dark web 'leaks' site. The ransomware group is known to run data extortion attacks against its victims.

EVENT: Pre-ransomware and exfiltration on an insured construction company

RECOVERY: Pre-emptive measures taken under multiple policies

Cover was available for the immediate appointment of an IT forensic expert to determine what had occurred and what data might have been affected so the company could make quick strategic decisions about how to proceed, including whether to engage in extortion negotiations with the threat actor group.

A specialist cyber public relations firm was engaged to carefully manage the reputational impacts of the cyberattack, and in particular advise on communications to sensitive clients while the forensic investigation and review of the published data was ongoing.

Cover was also available for pre-emptive legal advice sought in Australia along with international jurisdictions in which the Insured company was domiciled and operated so the notification strategy could be aligned globally to minimise regulatory risk.

The benefit of having these experts' advice on standby became evident as after pressuring the Insured, the threat actors began publishing the stolen data on the dark web.

Ransomware and exfiltration event

An Insured educational institution was impacted by a ransomware attack causing a major system outage alongside the exfiltration and subsequent publication of a significant amount of data that needed to be reviewed.

EVENT: Ransomware and exfiltration on an insured educational institution

RECOVERY: A number of workstreams under multiple cyber policy coverages were essential

Cover was available for expert IT forensic specialists to investigate the root cause and scope of the ransomware attack, assess what data was accessed and exfiltrated, and ensure the containment of the ransomware to eliminate the threat of further damage.

Once that immediate workstream was complete, teams could shift focus to incident recovery and to restoring the significant number of impacted servers and applications which needed to be carefully re-integrated. The Insured opted to staff the system recovery efforts using its own employees and cover was available where those employees were required to work overtime to complete the recovery efforts and assist in getting business back to normal.

Cyber claims examples

Unauthorised access event

An Insured IT provider discovered unauthorised access to a dedicated platform used by its business clients which contained financial and personal information contained in emails.

The threat actor had set up a complex scheme of email forwarding and similar rules so that its activity could go undetected. The nature of the cyberattack meant that a detailed, lengthy forensic investigation was required to determine what had been accessed and when, so clients could be notified as required.

EVENT: Unauthorised access to a dedicated platform containing financial and personal information

RECOVERY: A detailed lengthy forensic investigation was required, where case by case approach was taken

Cover was available for the IT provider's appointed breach lawyers to provide advice on legal obligations involving dealings with multiple regulators and ultimately notifying the impacted clients.

This included the engagement of a dedicated eDiscovery provider to streamline the review of the impacted data and distribution of notification letters to business clients and impacted individuals.

Given the number of clients potentially affected and the wide range of different industries they operated in, a case by case approach needed to be taken. Remediation efforts by other IT vendors were also required to eradicate the threat and ensure there was no risk of ongoing access to the platform by the threat actor.
